The Canadian Arch, built across Whitehall in honor of the Coronation, gives us an excellent standpoint for looking up the famous old street. We are facing almost due north. That is the Nelson monument which we see straight ahead in Trafalgar Square and the building beyond the monument is the National Gallery. The Horse Guards and the Admiralty are here at our left. Westminster Abbey is behind us, at the south end of Parliament street. When daylight dawned this morning (August 9, 1902), there were little groups of people gathered here along the street, determined to be in season for a place. The legions of strangers who had paid large sums for windows came a little more leisurely, but after 9:30 the street was closed to all but royal vehicles. After [illegible] on [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] the great throngs have been waiting, every inch of space occupied as we see it, watching the carriages which have come rolling by bearing members of the royal family to the Abbey. The little sons of the Prince of Wales and [illegible] in their [illegible] delighted everybody [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] while the crowds [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] called [illegible] of [illegible] places [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible]. That [illegible] "[illegible]" and [illegible] moving between the buildings at the left of the street [illegible] the [illegible] gilded [illegible] [illegible] state [illegible] by [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] members of the Household Guards [illegible] being [illegible] Dragoons from the [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] of the carriage where King Edward and Queen Alexandra are seated [illegible] of the highest honors [illegible] So next the carriage are the Royal Horse Guards with the Duke of Connaught [illegible].
